Market Commentary

- US equities maintained their strong outperformance, fueled by robust AI investment and earnings, particularly in tech and cloud sectors. European markets remained tactically underweighted, facing elevated volatility from persistent inflation, energy price uncertainty, and slow structural reforms, keeping fixed income yields elevated.
- The US maintains resilient growth around 2%, driven by AI and strong consumer spending, but inflation stays elevated (3-4%), prompting cautious monetary policy (3.5-4.4%). Europe faces subdued growth (1.4% in 2025) and renewed inflation threats from external shocks, leading to a flexible, vigilant central bank stance amid structural headwinds.
- Investors favor US equities, especially AI and tech, expecting continued outperformance, though valuation caution is warranted. European markets face sustained volatility with an underweight recommendation. Focus will be on central bank policy signals, energy markets, and structural reforms, alongside selective opportunities in higher-yielding EM and Indian equities.
